Occurrence of Erectile disorder or Impotence

An erection is triggered by the nervous system. The nervous system gets triggered through physical, sensory or psychological stimulation. This is the arousal. This sets off the numerous reactions in your body. The impulses travel from the brain to the male organ. These cause the corpora cavernosa of the male organ to relax. This causes more blood to flow to the male organ. The membrane that surrounds the corpora cavernosa traps the blood inside it. There is an increase in the pressure inside the male organ. This causes the male organ to swell and harden. This results in an erection.

In men who are healthy an erection is developed when a male organ gets firm and a man can enjoy the sensual contact with the lady. He can enjoy the sensual contact till he can gain orgasm. If the male organ does not get firm then he is not able to enjoy the sensual contact.

The erectile disorder is caused when the brain cannot send signals to generate an erection. It is even caused when the flow of blood is not proper. It might even be caused when the erectile tissue gets damaged.
