

Animal models are a valuable tool for studying Pompe's disease pathophysiology and testing potential treatments. Our company is committed to providing our clients with appropriate animal models for studying this disease. Our custom animal models are designed to mimic the genetic mutations that cause human Pompe's disease, allowing researchers to study the progression of the disease and test potential treatments. These models can be customized to include specific mutations or genetic backgrounds, providing greater flexibility for preclinical studies.